(Photo by United States Air Force) WASHINGTON (CN) – A report Friday from the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff provides scant evidence that the Islamic Republic of Iran attacked a military base in southern Syria last month. The report, made public Friday, was written as part of the Pentagon’s official response to a draft inquiry from the Senate Armed Services Committee. The inquiry requested the Pentagon create a working group that would investigate the circumstances of the strike. Determining what transpired on the ground in Syria on July 19 was just one of the challenges officials faced in addressing the potential attack, which “significantly disrupted” operations on the ground, according to the report. “The review team identified a June 7, 2019 timeline of events that likely affected the resumption of [U.S.] activity,” said the report, which was written by the Joint Staff’s director, U.S. Strategic Command Gen. Paul Selva. Speaking to reporters on Friday, Selva said U.S. intelligence analysts and Israel officials had assessed that the attack was launched from the border town of Al-Qusayr, inside Syria and roughly 35 miles west of the Tabqa air base, where American forces were conducting a training exercise. “Based on our findings we believe that the Iranian Revolutionary Guard Corps conducted an unannounced attack with Iranian weapons on July 19, 2019, against a Syrian military base on the Syria-Iraq border,” Selva told reporters. Selva said the Iranian attack left Syrian government forces “divided, vulnerable and unsure of their defenses.” “This withdrawal of Syrian forces allowed ISIS to reestablish control of territory in both Syria and Iraq,” said Selva. “This effect was immediate and sustained.” Among the reports the Pentagon cites as proof that the strike was carried out by Iran are two U.S. assessment reports, which analyzed the attack itself. edd6d56e20
