Scroll down to See More Examples, etc - thank you for submitting questions! A: The difference between the two anchor point options is that the first is an "anchor point" on the layer, whereas the second is an "anchor point" on the composition. With the first anchor point, the anchor point on the layer is constrained to the bounds of that layer. With the second anchor point, the anchor point on the layer is constrained to the bounds of the composition, and that's what allows for things like stretching an anchor point to the perimeter of a box that contains other layers. Here's a link that gives more information about it: A: The main difference is that the first option works on one layer at the time, while the second option works on an entire comp as one anchor point. Searching for the primary structure of a mammalian blood-group-related antigen, swainsonine. A glycoprotein isolated from pig urine, the primary structure of which is unknown, is used as a model system for the isolation of the primary structure of a mammalian blood-group-related antigen. Swainsonine, an inhibitor of mannosidase-I, selectively blocks the formation of galabiose, the terminal carbohydrate residue of the glycoprotein. A sequence of nine amino acid residues has been isolated, which is not present in the native molecule and which shows homology with certain segments of the primary structure of alpha-D-galactosidases from various microbial sources. The sequential isolation of peptides having the sequence of swainsonine is achieved by chemical cleavage of the carbohydrate portion of the glycoprotein to yield oligosaccharide chains which can be isolated in good yield and purity.A direct correlation between p53 activation of the mitochondrial F1ATPase gene promoter and resistance to apoptosis. Resistance of tumor cells to apoptosis is a major impediment to successful cancer therapy. We have previously demonstrated that the activation of wild-type (
