What's new in STORY OF SEASONS: Pioneers Of Olive Town - Buffalo Costume:

Ball Saturday was dubbed "Old Town Day" by Columbus mayor Michael B. Coleman, and more than a million of our most sensitive citizens were treated to a free fall through a slate quarry. Thus was the humble precursor to our civic Christmas carnival sadly demolished. Gone in the morning is the 400-foot-long diorama. Gone is the honking T-40-A tank. Gone is the slide that took a pair of limbs and a life. But that's just common sense. From the egg-hatching-time of the 1978 parade - when the top official was a little Italian named Ronnie, and the ringleader around the year 2000 was the galvanizing influence of a redheaded 6-year-old girl named Mila - Columbus has displayed more than a passing interest in the progress of America. Every year, usually at the October or May festival, a main street becomes a colorful carnival. There are food stands, games, merchants, businesses, shops and organs playing merry confusion. For example, the Oxbow VFW hall burned at midnight. Since they were too broke to repair it, they built a temporary hall across the street. So the festival's big social event last Friday night was The Buffalo Costume Ball. This strange affair is typical of the strange events that have been preoccupying our local people since the last century became a decade. In the late 19th century, Columbus was populated by more Germans than it is now. But in that time of colorful customs, they had one of their own. During an annual festival in June, some 8,000 German men and women in full Bavarian dress danced in the street. They saw it as a good-natured party. Then Columbus consisted of one church and about 500 people. The Catholic church was erected during the gold rush and hardly more than a few floors high. As thousands poured into the town, they brought with them their own version of Christmas, which included an act of interpretation of the birth of Christ by roller skates. All of it was tumultuous and lively. Topping the giddiness in Columbus at the turn of the century was the personification of it. An old bachelor named Thomas Richard wanted to celebrate the beginning of his 50th birthday. Instead of parades and parties, he held a mammoth costume ball in the gymnasium of the Memorial High School, dousing the place with hundreds of wreathes of pine. All those fancy feathers, German
